Harold Washington, Lionel Wilson Offer New Leadership

BLACKS POISED FOR VICTORY IN CHICAGO, OAKLAND MAYOR RACES

Black mayoral candidates HAROLD WASHINGTON (in Chicago) and LIONEL WILSON (in Oakland) are the frontrunning candidates in their respective races. Both are committed to solving the immense problems of rampant unemployment and a lack of social services in their cities.

(Oakland, Calif.) - Throughout his remarkably broad-based campaign to become the first Black mayor of Oakland, Lionel Wilson has been complimented in many ways, always with superlatives and glowing respect - "A Judge for all Seasons," "A Major Drum for Justice," "A man with leadership capacity, a man with compassion and intelligence... who has paid his dues," "The People's Candidate," "Everyone's Choice for Mayor."

Indeed, "our" mayor, as Black Panther Party chairperson Elaine Brown recently referred to the community-oriented, 60-year-old jurist, has won major backing from wide cross-sections of the city as a result of his deep commitment to the people of Oakland. Distinguishing himself from the other candidates in the field of 10, Wilson has established strong credentials as a person who cares about the people of Oakland, and as one who won't let the people down.

Since the announcement of his candidacy for mayor in early January, Judge Wilson has raised several key questions for consideration by Oakland voters, emphasizing in particular the issues of unemployment, rising crime rates and an eroding tax base as essential problems to be overcome.

At the same time, Wilson has stressed that Oakland, a port city of some 373,000, unique with a majority "minorities" population, has "the economic, human and environmental potential to develop into a Renaissance city."
