LONG, HOT SUMMER STARTS EARLY

CHICAGO POLICE RIOT SPARKS LATINO RESISTANCE

The Latino community here exploded last week when Chicago police arrogantly disrupted a Puerto Rican Day celebration. Above, angry Puerto Rican people overturn police car before setting it afire.

(Chicago, Ill.) - Chicago's Dearborn Park Latino community erupted in open rebellion last Saturday evening when Chicago police overran a Puerto Rican Day celebration in the sprawling park here, killing two Puerto Rican young men and igniting pent-up frustrations and long-standing animosity towards their condition of life in a spontaneous hour-long revolt.

In addition to the two murdered men — Raphael Cruz, 25, and Julio Osorio, 26 — 116 people, including dozens of Chicago cops, were injured and 119 arrested. Also, 17 Chicago police vehicles were damaged, three of which were overturned and totally destroyed.

Contrary to early police reports which claimed officers were attempting to peacefully break up a fight between two rival gangs, the Spanish Cobras and the Latin Kings, when Osorio fired several shots at two Wood Street District cops, wildly missing but striking Cruz, Latino families in the park assert that the Chicago police suddenly charged into the area in a wild, club-swinging mass, arbitrarily beating Puerto Rican men and women, young and old.

Sources in Chicago have told THE BLACK PANTHER that the cops' mad dash may have been an officially sanctioned act of retaliation for a bombing earlier in the day at the downtown County Building.
