The new sponsors announced by the Committee for Justice are: U.S. Representative Parren Mitchell from Maryland, present chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus (CBC); U.S. Representative Charles Diggs from Michigan, chairman of the House Subcommittee on African Affairs and a leader in the CBC; Georgia state Senator Julian Bond; comedian/activist Dick Gregory; and Mark Lane, attorney, author and director of the Citizens' Commission of Inquiry.

Congressman Parren Mitchell, whose brother Clarence Mitchell heads the NAACP lobby effort in Washington, D.C., is a longtime and outspoken advocate of civil and human rights for Black and poor people.

Mitchell assumed chairmanship of the Congressional Black Caucus late last year and since has led the CBC in several political confrontations with President Carter, particularly concerning the issue of Black representation in Cabinet and sub-Cabinet decision-making positions in the new administration.

Most recently, Parren Mitchell has agreed to sponsor a key Transfer Amendment to the federal budget, proposing that $15 billion be set aside from the defense budget, to be used
